OF CANADIANS, BY CANADIANS, AND FOR CANADIANS

(With Profound Apology to Lincoln's Gettysburg Address)

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

In those turbulent days before the Agency, one of the most reprehensible practices unhappily indulged in by rabid anti-Zionists was to impugn the patriotism and loyalty of their Zionist foes. Zionism, they argued, implied a divided allegiance which was not consistent with citizenship in this land or that, and made necessary a hyphenation of national loyalties which precluded a proper attitude toward the government of which the Zionist was just seemingly a part. Sometimes the aspersions cast upon truly loyal and earnest Zionists by their flag waving and demagogic opponents were positively immoral and earned for these super-patriots the contempt of their otherwise sympathetic colleagues. With the formation of the Agency, it was hoped that such ungrounded and pernicious propaganda was at an end.

And now, we have the glorious spectacle wherein these selfsame tactics are being employed by those who so vehemently protested against this very offence. Those who resented so deeply (and with so much justification) this practice on the part of the recalcitrant anti-Zionists, are now exploiting—at least in Toronto—these same cheap, and jingoistic tactics in order to gain their somewhat questionable ends. Behold a new magazine announced in the public press as a periodical "by Canadians for Canadians", the editorial policy of which will be directed "by British subjects only." The implication contained in this none too subtle innuendo is apparent to us all, and it is pathetic indeed that a great cause must rest upon such flimsy foundations, and that a movement, the blatant shibboleth of which is the recrudescence of Jewish values, should utilize so un-Jewish a principle as vengeance, to attain its goal. Such a magazine which might be otherwise worthy but which unfortunately has been founded by a fanatical zeal for revenge and is being directed meanly and scurvily against Jewish brethren who are as yet merely "sojourners" in its sponsor's midst, is certain to arouse the wrath of all fair minded Jews in our community.

Our own "brand" of Judaism has of course been frequently impugned, but if we understand anything at all about Jewish law, we are certain that it contains a profound solicitude for the "stranger who is within the gates." It is one thing to proclaim from the housetop our Jewishness and our unflinching loyalty thereto, but it is quite another to live up to its sublime principles. That so banal and petty a jingoism should be the first note sounded by a periodical that purports to fill a Jewish need, is lamentable indeed.

And there is another aspect, perhaps even more insidious, to this same situation. We Jews, who have suffered so poignantly from the chauvinism of every nation upon the face of the earth; we who have righteously resented the crushing of minorities in the attempt to make Germany safe for the Germans, Roumania for the Roumanians, Russia for the Russians, Poland for the Polish; we, the victims of such a vicious nationalism, now exploit the selfsame slogan from which we have suffered so much to create the same sort of antagonism against our own. We, who so bitterly resent the ostracisms we suffer because we are still considered a people different and apart, a people foreign and alien, now turn in our wrath against those who happen not to be "British subjects only," and in a paper pledged to "Jewish idealism in spite of contending factions and outside enemies," slyly insinuate that here at last in a periodical "by Canadians (nice Canadian and pleasantly Nordic names, however, being sadly lacking among its sponsors and contributors) for Canadians." God pity a Jewish state in which such a rigid nationalism and such a venomous inhospitality hold sway.

As an antidote to such intolerance we suggest that those who were thrilled by Rabbi Brickner's stirring address at the King Edward Hotel last week and who were in complete agreement with his views (to some of which we naturally took radical exception) follow him all the way and concur likewise in his insistence that there are two sides—both legitimate and well-founded—to the present impasse in Palestine. Particularly happy also were the opening remarks of the Chairman, Edward Gelber, who, after paying tribute to the impeccable character of Judah Leon Magnes, his honesty and moral courage, stressed the need for a complete explanation of the facts before any definite conclusions be reached and before approval or disapproval be expressed: there exists no need for a fear psychology or for false accusations as to Magnes' motives; what is most exigent is sound thinking upon the subject and some degree of toleration for another's point of view. This note sounded by both the chairman and the speaker should be taken to heart by those who applauded so heartily, for without such mutual understanding, any cause will eventually be betrayed by its frenzied and fanatical protagonists. Only out of the unprejudiced clash of varying opinions and the struggle of contending ideas will truth emerge triumphant. Although the leaders in the Zionist ranks elsewhere recognize this perfectly obvious fact, and although even the official organ of the Zionist Organization of America the "New Palestine" can permit in its columns both sides of the controversy, as for example the most stimulating discussion between Maurice Samuel and James Marshall in the issue of January 10th., for some strange reason, in Toronto only one side of this admittedly two-sided question can be countenanced, and when the forbidden side becomes just slightly vocal a new organ must be founded with its blazing streamers announcing to the world that it is by Canadians for Canadians, and God bless our native (?) land by British subjects only.

JUDGE JACOB COHEN

We cannot refrain from joining the resounding chorus which is rising on every hand to sing the well-earned praises of Judge Jacob Cohen, who, by virtue of his exemplary character, his splendid career, his reputation for fair dealing between his fellowmen, for his broad sympathy and sweet humanity, has gained the admiration, the respect, and the genuine devotion of his fellow citizens. Upon the occasion of his retirement from the bench, after many years of faithful service, the Toronto Mail and Empire, in commenting on the annuity recently granted him by the City Council, paid him the following glowing tribute:

TO BUILD CENTRAL INSTITUTION

Dr. Zvi Cohen, Hebrew scholar, was appointed executive director of the United Talmud Torahs, at a meeting of the council Monday. Dr. Cohen comes from Poland where he was editor of several Yiddish newspapers.
 He attended Dropsie College of Philadelphia, graduating with the degree of doctor of philosophy. He joined the staff of various newspapers in the United States, and was identified with Jewish educational institutions.
 Books by him on the various sects in Judaism of post-biblical and rabbinical times, have been published. He made a special study of the Sadducees and the Pharisees, basing his work on material recently discovered in Egypt and in the Orient. The United Talmud Torahs consists of eight schools and one Talmudic College where over 1300 children receive instruction in elementary school work, ethics of Hebrew Religion, Hebrew literature and culture, both of Biblical and post-Biblical periods. A course in modern Hebrew literature is taught in the advanced classes. The Bialick Hebrew School included in the United Talmud Torahs, has both an elementary school and a high school for girls. H. M. Levinoff, chairman of the Architectural Committee,

Rabbi's Address Auxiliary

Ladies' Auxiliary of the United Talmud Torahs met Wednesday, January 29, at the Y.M.H.A. Building. Mrs. A. S. Radovsky, president, presided. Mrs. E. Losznick sang "Hakodah." Rabbi H. Cohen, H. Abramowitz and Charles Bender were guest speakers. Rabbi Cohen spoke in Yiddish. He said: To achieve work of merit Jews must be united and true to themselves. Known to the world as a religious people, their greatness lies in their staunch adherence to the religious faith and when Jews no longer bless the coming and going of the Sabbath alien creeds will bless their going. Jewish children must be taught the Torah, they must know their religion and when they are informed they will be able to distinguish between complimentary words of lip and the true meanings. Through the erection and maintenance to Talmud Torahs and Yeshiva, the great Jewish heritage can be handed from one generation to another. It is the duty of every Jewish parent not only to provide for their own children but also to provide education for those who cannot afford it." Rabbi Cohen blessed the meeting.

"It is from the Mothers of Israel that support must be sought," said Rabbi Bender. "To-day, due to economic conditions, women have the freedom and the time to devote themselves to the religious upbringing of the children. The mothers are now able to become the spiritual father of the children. From biblical times the religion and education of the Jewish people have been inseparable and the Jewish women have always been a source of inspiration. To them is great part is due the redemption of Israel."

Rabbi Abramowitz stressed the Talmud Torahs as sources from which trained Jewish leaders could be obtained. "In saving the life of the Jewish child, Moses, Pharaoh's daughter saved the life of the Jewish people and the civilization of the world. Herein lies the true significance of Talmud Torah work. Giving Jewish children a true Jewish teaching and upbringing, there is obtained a generation of Jews of learning, who become teachers and rabbis and who propagate the great ideals of Moses. In supporting Talmud work, the source of Jewish spirituality is assured." Mrs. Radovsky thanked the speakers. Mrs. H. H. Livingstone made an appeal for help. Mrs. J. Marson, on behalf of the original auxiliary, gave the new treasurer of the auxiliary, cheque for $840. A membership drive was launched under the chairmanship of Mrs. V. Aaron and Mrs. M. Leco who were asked to form committees to assist them.

JEWISH LECTURE FORUM

I. Klein of New York, addressed Montreal Jewry Friday evening, January 31, under the auspices of the lecture Forum of the Zionist Order Habonim, on "The Jewish Ideal of Justice as Reflected in the Prophetic Writings." Mr. Klein is a graduate of the Teachers' College of Columbia, and of the Teachers' Institute of the Jewish Theological College of New York City. Louis Glazer gave a talk on "The Ethics of Judaism." Both lectures were given in English at Bnai Jacob Community Hall, Fairmount Avenue West. Mr. Lunsky, who recently arrived from Poland spoke in Yiddish on the well-known Zionist Isam Gruenbaum, discussing his fight for Jewish rights in the Polish Parliament, of which Mr. Gruenbaum is a member. Bernard Figler described a phase of Jewish history.

STANLEY GARDNER CONCERT

An approaching event of interest to music lovers is the piano recital which Stanley Gardner will give in the Ritz Carlton Hotel on Monday evening, February 24. Mr. Gardner has been instrumental in introducing much new music during the last fifteen years and his programme this year will be no exception in that respect. Works by Turina, Joseph Marx and Goossens will be heard for the first time and the programme will be rounded out by a number of classical compositions including the Beethoven Sonata, Op. 110, considered by many to be the most beautiful of Beethoven's compositions for piano.

EFREM ZIMBALIST AT HIS MAJESTYS FEBRUARY 23

One of the most famous names in the musical world today is that of Zimbalist. Although a Russian Jew by birth, Zimbalist is, in many respects, an American artist. He is an American citizen, makes his winter home in New York City and his summer home in Connecticut, and has two children born in this country.

Zimbalist was born in Rostov-on-the-Don on April 9, 1889. His first teacher was his father, who was an orchestra leader. The boy showed such extraordinary gifts at so early an age that when he was only nine years old he became first violinist in a grand opera orchestra. And it was not because his father happened to be the distinguished director of the opera house, for the elder Zimbalist was the most exacting master Efrem ever had. It was only at the insistence of the older musicians that the father finally consented to entrust his young son with so important a post.

It was the insatiable desire to master music in its broadest forms—orchestration, theory and all—that made Zimbalist wish to enter the orchestra. It was this enthusiasm which decided his father in sending him in the autumn of 1903 to the Imperial Conservatory in Petrograd where he entered the class of Professor Leopold Auer. Zimbalist was graduated from the Conservatory as the winner of the coveted gold medal and the Rubinstein scholarship of 12,000 rubles. On November 7, 1907, he made his Berlin debut, playing the Brahms Concerto. Two months later he made his first London appearance and then went on a tour of the music centers of Europe, ever triumphant.

His American debut Zimbalist made on October 27, 1911, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, giving the first performance in America of Glazounoff's A Minor Concerto. He was immediately hailed as an artist of unusual merit. Despite his fame, he is not convinced that he knows everything about making music on his instrument, and he still confers frequently with his illustrious teacher, Leopold Auer. Although about eighty years old, Professor Auer is as helpful a guide as ever he was—a fact which Zimbalist finds of great advantage.

Aside from his operetta "Honey-Suite in Old Form" for violin and piano (1911); Three Slavic Dances (1911); "Fantasy on the Motives of Rimsky-Korsakoff's 'Coe d'Or'"; arrangements for the violin; and a Sonata for violin and piano, in G minor.

In 1925, Zimbalist made a tour of the Orient, receiving a royal welcome. In the spring of 1927 he started on a world tour, traveling over 50,000 miles and playing in Australia, New Zealand, Java, India, China, Japan, Hawaii and throughout Europe.

There is hardly a city in the world in which Zimbalist has not played, nor is there a symphony orchestra of importance with which he has not appeared frequently as soloist. He is one of the greatest artists of our day, and his every appearance is a source of joy to music lovers.

ISABELLE BURNADA

Burnada is a professional name, taken from the name of Burns and the last two syllables of Canada—for it was in Canada her voice was discovered and it was Mr. Patrick Burns of Calgary who made it possible for her to complete her musical education.

Born on the Isle of Mauritius of French and English parentage Isabelle Boyer de la Giroday came as a child to Canada with her parents in 1909.

Mr. Burns' attention having been drawn to her marvellous voice he undertook to have her voice trained and for six years she studied in Paris with famous masters.

When she made her debut at the great Gallo-Roman Theatre of Orange, France, about five years ago she was acclaimed as a new star in the realm of music.

In 1926 she received in Paris the diploma of the "Maitres Professionnels du Chant Français."

Her concert appearances in Europe and the United States have met with marked success and since returning to Canada she has continued to achieve triumphs in her many concert appearances.

PARALYSIS

Paralysis appears to be a disorder of the muscle, but it is, in reality, a condition which results from a disorder of the nerves or the nervous mechanism which controls the muscles. The disorder of the nervous control causes either a rigidity of the muscles or a relaxed state; in either of these, complete or partial loss of control exists, and the muscles involved or the part served by the muscles, is said to be paralysed.

The disorder of the nervous control is caused by damage to the nervous tissue. If the spinal cord is injured, there is a loss of sensation below that point. The senses of touch, pain and temperature are lost because the connection which carries these sensations in from the skin is broken at the point of injury. Paralysis does occur as the result of infection, the action of bacteria or living disease germs. In certain communicable diseases, the spinal cord is selected for special attack. This is the case in infantile paralysis, in which disease, unfortunately, paralysis is one of the outstanding features. Injuries of the head may result in paralysis on account of the bone's pressing on certain centres in the brain which control the muscles.

The rupture of a blood vessel in the brain means pressure; depending upon the extent of the haemorrhage and its location, paralysis to a greater or less extent occurs. This condition is commonly called apoplexy or paralytic stroke. The blood contained in the blood vessels is under pressure. If the wall of the blood vessel become weakened, it may give way under this pressure and haemorr-hage result. The blood vessels of the brain are particularly delicate and that is why they give way first. The weakening of the blood vessel walls occurs as a result of disease, particularly syphilis. In other cases, the break is not due to any particular weakening of the blood vessel walls, but to an increase in the blood pressure to a point that causes the blood to burst through the vessel walls.

The extent of the relief which may be given to the paralyzed depends upon the cause of the condition. Many forms of the disease can be helped;
some can be improved; for others, unfortunately, little or nothing can be done. Prevention is chiefly done through the control of infections.

dressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toron-

Founding of Homeland Under Mandate Discussed by British Statesman

British responsibilities in Palestine have naturally come much under discussion since the outbreaks of violence which took place there last August said Viscount Cecil of Chelwood in a recent interview. Arguments have inevitably centred chiefly upon the undertakings in respect of the Jewish National Home, which obviously introduces a special problem of an unfamiliar kind into the more ordinary problems which British administrators in an Eastern country are accustomed to cope with, and the British public is accustomed to hear about.

Englishmen, inside and outside Government offices, are suspicious of the unknown, and sometimes quicker to proclaim their suspicions than to inform themselves about the thing suspected. The discussions will, therefore, be all to the good if they lead to a clearer understanding of our specific duties as Mandatory Power in Palestine, and the sources from which we derive our authority. A good deal of confused thinking on these essential points is, I believe, due to the natural tendency to consider British policy in Palestine from a purely national angle.

This no longer corresponds to the facts of the situation, whatever that may have been before the issue of the Mandate of the League of Nations. By virtue of that document the decision to establish in Palestine a national home for the Jewish people, which rested originally on a British promise of co-operation with the Zionists, was put on the basis of an international pledge. For this pledge Great Britain, as the mandatory power, became the trustee.

One effect of this development has been to put our right to control the destinies of Palestine on a footing much firmer than the mere right of conquest. From the Jewish point of view their moral security for the National Home is immensely strengthened. It has behind it the considered support of the League of Nations, and we may add, of the United States, who were deeply interested in this particular mandate (largely on account of its provisions regarding the Holy Places), and approved it by resolution of Senate and Congress in 1922.

To those who, like myself, have from the first been convinced believers that the policy outlined in the "Balfour Declaration" of 1917 was both right and practicable, this development is profoundly satisfactory. The mere fact of the accountability of British administration to the League of Nations may not in itself do much to lessen the difficulties of government. The text of the Mandate which we administer is, however, capable of doing something in this direction, and it is possible that the value of the very definite guidance that it gives has not yet been fully appreciated, even by those whose business it is to carry it out. In any case, it certainly repays careful study by everyone interested in the future of Palestine.

This Mandate has features that make it unlike any of the others which have a common origin in Article 21 of the Covenant of the League. Apart from the special provisions about the guardianship of the Holy Places, the clauses that refer to the Jewish immigration and colonization are the distinguishing feature of the Palestine document. Without undue metaphor it may be described as a Deed of Trust for the Jewish National Home. Arab rights are safeguarded effectively, in a context which emphasizes the fact that they are subordinate, but in no way antagonistic, to the progressive fulfilment of the main purpose of the Mandate.

Therefore the text must be considered as a single whole. To treat it as a set of directions for a kind of administrative tight-rope walking between the Scylla of injustice to the Arabs and Charybdis of faith-breaking with the Jews, would be to misinterpret it in spirit and in letter, and be the surest way to fall into both dangers, and to perpetuate the disquiet which has recently caused so deplorable a setback.

I do not suggest that this mistake has been made. The task of the Mandatory Power is, however, a difficult one. The economic, social and political problems raised by the Jewish immigration are new even in the varied history of colonization.

The introduction of an immigrant population on a high level of civilization into the midst of an extremely backward community is a delicate operation. Firmness as well as tact is needed to carry it through, especially after a crisis such as Palestine is emerging from at the present moment. We need not wait for the report of the commission to feel certain that improvement in relations between the races in Palestine depends upon a general conviction that the upbuilding of the National Home will not be allowed to suffer interruption by agitators. Therefore it is possible that the time is ripe for a re-affirmation of the policy defined in the Mandate.

In that event a note of hope and confidence in the future might well be sounded at the same time. Even although the vision and initiative shown by the British Government in the first instance have been merged in the wider recognition of the claim of the Jews to achieve their age-long aspiration, the British people may still take a peculiar pride in the enterprise to which they were the first to hold out a helping hand. For a partnership in the re-constitution of the Jewish nation on the soil of the Land of Promise is surely worthy of the traditions of a great colonizing Empire.

By Rabbi HARRY J. STERN, of Montreal,
Associate Contributing Editor

CAN HUMAN NATURE BE CHANGED?

Cynics and pessimists are harsh critics of life and human nature. These "sour" individuals ever premise their assertions with the following—"Human nature being what it is—you can not expect anything better".

Yet the truest thing that can be said about human nature, is the fact that it can be changed. It is constantly being changed. The whole course of human history and the record of the lives of all the great and good, is one continual story of the changes in human nature. Whether the fundamental human instincts and impulses can be altered is not so important. Certainly the manner and way in which they work can be changed. In this element of change, lies the hope of humanity and the promise of all those values which our minds crave in the hours of despair. What we can say about human nature is just this—"Human nature being what it is, at this moment, does at this present moment—the things that it does. The child being what he is, thinks, speaks and acts as a child. But also being what he is—he changes and soon ceases to be a child. The most important thing about the child is not his actualities, but his potentialities. He has potentialities for manhood. How more beautiful would life be for most of us if we could judge our fellow-men, not by their actualities, but by their possibilities. The religious individual especially ought ever to think of his neighbour, not as the selfish greedy animal, but as one whom the psalmist described as a "little less than the angels". A man may fail, but that failure need not be final. A man at times may be vulgar and cruel—but these need not exist in his personality forever. Develop in a man will power, and give him proper environment, and he will deliver himself from these things that make for spiritual bondage. Browning uttered a sublime truth when he said: "It is not what man does, but what man would do that exalts him". Every individual, no matter how damaged be his soul has reservoirs of generosity, kindness and goodness. And he can give expression to good in life if he only disciplines himself to tap the reservoirs of spiritual Education and religion rest on the hypothesis that the individual society have possibilities which have never been realized. These products to the world, that human nature can be changed.

RABBI, CHAZAN, SHOCHET

Of late, quite a few letters reached my desk deploring the conditions in present day Jewry regarding the honored name of Rabbi. The correspondents point out that the Jewish laity, out of ignorance seem to style a chazan (cantor) as well as shochet (ritual slaughterer) with the title of Rabbi.

The above situation, of course, is tragic. A man who has received no "ordination", either from a Rabbinical Seminary, Yeshiva or great Rabbinical authorities—has no right to be called Rabbi, or call himself Rabbi. In Liberal and Conservative Judaism of the present day—a man, before he can receive his rabbinical diploma, must be a graduate of a secular university. Congregations will often summon a man as spiritual leader though he possess neither of the above qualifications. Self-respecting and informed Jews must call a halt to the present situation. They must demand that "singers" and "slaughterers" be designated as Rabbis.

JUDGE STERN JUDGES

Philadelphia Jewry failed to reach its goal in this year's Federation campaign. Judge Stern, one of the outstanding citizens of this city of Brotherly-love, rightly condemns the Jewish community for its failure. Of course, stock market crash is claimed to be the cause. But it is a poor excuse! Jews took care of their poor long before stock exchange came into existence. And judging from happenings in communal matters in many communities—"the crash" has become a most convenient excuse for "not giving". Some of our greedy rich have been praying for such an alibi to come upon the scene. As a matter of fact, there are enough resources in Montreal as well as in Philadelphia to take care of all communal enterprises. Most of us gave the crumbs before the crash and we need not cry when we are asked to give the mere crumbs after the crash. Some day "this thing of giving" will be examined and the recovery will be made that very few of us really "gave" with heart and might.

MY EGO

Of all the Egoists I know
(Including my most hearty foe)
Who for Self-love make ardent plea—
Not one's big I can match my me.

I see my soul in every eye;
I hear my heart in each heart's cry;
I feel myself in every me;
My ego is all humanity.

I perish with the men who die
On gory field that shame the sky;
Yet though I leave my flesh behind
My soul survives in humankind.

I triumph in each fair success;
Find joy in all men's happiness
I let the world flow into me;
I'm not a river; I am the sea!

I'll wipe a tear from my world's eye;
Enthroned a smile where reigned a sigh;
I'll help and give—not charity;
For I'll be doing that for me!

Oh, fellow men, if you'd but see
That we're mere parts of one big me,
We'd scrap arms, laws—at least be free,
And just be ruled by sympathy!

BRAZILIAN TRACTION

Preliminary estimates of Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited, earnings in 1929 show substantial increases over the previous year. The report is based on a statement just issued in conjunction with the company's earnings for December last.

Net earnings of the company for the twelve months are shown at $28,052,962, as compared with $24,889,330 in 1928, an increase of $3,163,632 net. The preliminary statement shows gross earnings of $49,351,215 against $42,774,813 in 1928, an increase of $6,576,402. The figures are subject to final adjustment when the annual accounts are made up.

SOUTHERN CANADA POWER

For the first time in the history of the company, gross earnings of Southern Canada Power Company, Limited, for the month of December last crossed the $200,000 mark, the actual figures being $204,314, while for the same month the net earnings established the record figure of $131,360, which is at the rate of over $1,500,000 a year. The earnings statement reveals that December constituted the 39th consecutive gain in the monthly net of the company.

STANDARD PAVING

Current earnings of Standard Paving & Materials are stated to be running around $5. per share on the 104,872 common shares outstanding. This compares with $4.86 reported at the time of the merger.

Contracts of substantial volume are understood to have been carried over from 1929 and the large construction programmes planned by municipalities and corporation are regarded as good assurance of continued activity in the company's affairs. In view of the limited competition in this particular field and talk of mergers from time to time together with existing conditions, increased profits and dividends are said to be an early possibility.

MCCOLL-FRONTENAC

Plans for Dominion-wide expansion of McColl-Frontenac Oil Company, Limited call for extension of the company's retail distribution stations to British Columbia within the next year or two and within

See Change for Better in Brazilian Situation

THE strength which developed in the stock of Brazilian Traction during the past few days, and which has carried that issue to a new high level for the present year, has been due, not so much to the continuously good showing in earnings made by the company over a period of many months, as to the expectation entertained in various quarters that the economic situation in the Republic of Brazil is making a progressive change for the better.

The milre, which was stabilized some years ago around 12 cents, experienced a drop last autumn to about 11 cents, following the dislocation of trade in the Republic of Brazil as a result of the over-production of coffee. Lately exchange has been strengthening up, so that there are those who are looking for a favorable announcement regarding the coffee situation. There is also talk of an internal loan in Brazil, which would work to the advantage of both the Government and the people.

The Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Company is almost certain to make a considerably better showing for the fiscal year ended December 31, 1929, than was the case in the previous year, when $18.47 was earned on each preference share and $6. paid. It was in 1928 that the change in capitalization occurred, so that two quarterly dividends of 1% were paid on the old ordinary shares of $100. per value, making $2.50 per share and two quarterly dividends of 44 cents on the new ordinary shares of no par value, these payments totalling 88 cents.

The company has just issued a statement of the earnings for the past year. This shows the aggregate gross earnings for the 12 months to have been $49,351,215, an increase of $6,576,402, while the net earnings were $28,052,962, an increase of $3,163,632. As these figures are subject to provision for depreciation and amortization, it is impossible to state what the amount will remain to be applied to the common stock. The accounts are now being compiled in Rio de Janeiro and it will probably be along in March before they are received at the head office in Toronto. The financial statement is usually available in May.

about the same period erection of two refineries to serve the western field, one possibly at Saskatoon, the other at the coast.

The rate at which the company is expanding is revealed by the fact that the Winnipeg field was entered two years ago and there are now 18 stations in that city.

Another important phase of the company's western programme may eventually be the development of Alberta acreage.

CITY DAIRY COMPANY

New records for sales, net profit and number of customers served were created, according to the financial statement of City Dairy Company for the year ended December 31, 1929. Earnings on the common stock were shown at $3.40 a share after all prior charges, and compares with $3.02 per share in 1928.

Net profits, after provision for all charges, including depreciation and Federal taxes, amounts to $562,928 compared with $327,963 for the year 1928. Quarterly dividends were paid, as usual, at the rate of $1. per annum on preference stock, and $2. per annum on common stock. The balance of profit, amounting to $129,128 was added to profit and loss surplus.

EASTERN DAIRIES

Prospects of an early dividend on Eastern Dairies stock are reported to be within reason, according to re-

TECK HUGHES

Teck Hughes has crosscut 60 feet of vein matter and is now drifting in the footwall on their 24th level. Across the 60 foot width, the average gold content is said to run $9. per ton. The management are now said to be concentrating in developments on the 18th and 19th levels and almost half of the machines in the mine are now working at these two levels. Stopping is said to have been started in the east section on the 2,000-foot horizon. Next month a winze will be started from this level. A northern engineering service states that new ore is being developed across 40 feet on the 19th level, west of the shaft. It states further that tonnage and grade on this level are greater apparently than on the famous 13th.

AMULET

The first train over new spur line to the Amulet went in last week according to word from Rouyn. The shipment contained 13 cars of machinery which are now being unloaded. The mill building is practically completed. The ore trestle from the shaft to the mill is now being covered with a snow shed. The mine is said to be completely developed with fire box holes, etc., and ready for immediate production.

LAKE SHORE

Lake Shore has reinforced its new shaft with steel and cement from the collar down to 400 feet, where the cave-in occurred. It is understood that the shaft will be reinforced down to 600 feet. Work on the mill extension proceeds at a rapid pace and a number of the concrete bases ports emanating from sources close to the affairs of the company.

Since its organization in 1926, when it acquired well established dairies and creameries in Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa, Winnipeg and Richmond, Que., the company has experienced a steady expansion in operation. This growth has been particularly marked during the current fiscal year, which ends on March 31, as indicated by a recent statement made by the president W. R. Aird, that earnings were running at a rate of around $3 a share, after interest, depreciation and taxes.

TWIN CITY RAPID TRANSIT

Reporting an increase of 3.71% in gross income but an increase of 50.66% in net, Twin City Rapid Transit Co. fulfilled earlier predictions that the year 1929 would witness a decided improvement.

Gross receipts for 1929 amounted to $13,487,976, as compared with $13,005,253 for the year 1928, an increase of 3.71%. The net income transferred to profit and loss for the year 1929, however, amounted to $1,255,878, as compared with $833,589 for 1928, an increase of 50.66%.

DONNACONA PAPER COMPANY

Reflecting adverse operating conditions in the industry lower profits and working capital position is shown in the second annual statement of the Donnacona Paper Company for the fiscal period ended December 31, 1929.

Profits for the 1929 period were $829,861, compared with $869,762 in the previous twelve months. Deduction for bond and debenture interest amounted to $625,000, and allowance for depreciation and depletion of timber limits was $281,956, a total of $826,956, as against total deductions in the previous year of $807,392. This left net profits of $2,905, as compared to $62,376 in 1928. Addition of these two amounts gives a net balance carried forward of $65,275.

Asbestos exports for the month of December, according to figures just released by the Department of Trade and Commerce, at Ottawa, show declines both from the preceding month, and the corresponding month of last year. During December of 1929, there was exported from Canada 11,614 tons of Asbestos valued at $791,505, as compared with 12,169 tons valued at $937,114 in the preceding month and 12,285 tons valued at $803,939 in December of 1928.

POWER CORPORATION OF CANADA

Gross revenue of Power Corporation of Canada for the six months ended December 31, exceeded $1,900,000, and shows an increase of $700,000 compared with the total of $1,200,000 for the same period in 1928.

Total revenue last year was $1,947,386.

Net revenue showed an even larger proportionate increase, being up from $1,00,000 to $1,500,000. Revenues from investments showed an increase of over $500,000 for the six months compared with the corresponding period of 1928. A second source of revenue, the sale of investments, showed profits $200,000 greater than was the case during the first half of the 1928-29 fiscal year.

As at December 31, 1929, the market value of investments held by Power Corporation of Canada was several million dollars above the value carried on the books of the company.

PREMIER GOLD

The regular six-cent quarterly dividend of Premier Gold Mining Company was paid to shareholders this month, according to announcement of H. A. Guesse, president and general manager. This dividend, amounting to $200,000, brings the total disbursements of the company to $14,350,000, all of which has been paid since December 31, 1921. The last annual report of the company indicated that sufficient ore reserves were in sight to assure the continuation of operations for the next three years. Since the publication of this report it is stated that another body of ore has been opened, while development of three other properties in the Portland Canal district indicates a longer life for the company.

ARNO MINES

Work done to date on the Coxheath property of Arno Mines shows a total length of over 700 feet of ore in one body on that level which will average at least 12 feet width and possibly considerably more on full development with one face in high grade ore across better than 12 feet and a second face in low grade material which is, however, still being followed.

This level has not yet been systematically sampled but its appearance would suggest that an average of around 4% copper will be obtained although the presence of high grade shipping ore on one wall would permit of almost any grade of production which the management sees fit to mine. The eastern section is now approaching a point which in the upper levels showed 14 to 20 feet of high grade ore and its complete development is believed to offer equal possibilities on the horizon being worked.

tons with the possibility of a still greater tonnage. This is due to the opening up of wider ore in 1507 steps than we originally figured on.

WRIGHT-HARGREAVES

From Kirkland Lake comes word that Wright-Hargreaves has cut a self-sinking body of ore on the 1,600-foot level. The station on the 2,200-foot level is about completed and work will be started on this horizon some time this week. Mill heads are said to have been stepped up and are now reported at $15. The average of $12. per ton is what the management is working for.

KIRKLAND LAKE GOLD

The drive at the 4,000-foot horizon of the Kirkland Lake Gold is still said to be in very good ore. The drift is now advanced approximately 50 feet. The average width of the vein is said to be from 11 to 12 feet.

FALCONBRIDGE NICKEL

The first furnace of the new smelter at Falconbridge Nickel will be in use in early this month according to word from Sudbury. Finishing touches are now being made to the plant. The second hole of the deep diamond drilling campaign has been drilled due to the fact that it was somewhat at shallower depths necessitating a longer journey to the ore body.

ZIONIST NEWS

The Jewish National Fund of Canada, under the supervision of Dr. B. Weinert, its European representative, will launch a Dominion-wide campaign, which will have as its goal the planting of about 10,000 trees on the soil of the Jewish National Fund in Palestine, to be known as the Forest of The Canadian Jewish Youth. The drive will commence on the Jewish Arbor Day (15th of Shevat) which falls this year on February 13, and will continue throughout the year. The head office of the Zionist Organization of Canada is preparing booklets, which will be distributed to the Jewish youth, through teachers in the various schools of Canada and through leaders of youth organizations. The booklets will contain 50 spaces, where Jewish National Fund stamps can be pasted.

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancor,
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor."

A new English-Jewish weekly publication made its appearance last week in the Zionist Jewish Standard of Toronto and the Canadian Jewish Review congratulates the Jewish Standard, Limited, whoever they are; the editor, whoever he is; and the printer, also anonymous. Their names do not appear. The Jewish Standard takes its place along with the Canadian Jewish Chronicle, of Montreal; the Canadian Jewish Review, of Montreal and Toronto; and the Jewish Post and Jewish Western News, both of Winnipeg, named here in the order of their establishment. These papers intend to serve about 125,000 Jews throughout the Dominion. Whether the newest one is actually necessary considering that its organizers could have purchased a section for Zionist propaganda from the Review at much less cost than a separate publication demands or considering that the Canadian Jewish Chronicle has already been serving hard-shell Zionists faithfully for many years, is a question. However, the Jewish Standard is a very presentable paper from a typographical standpoint and its general editorial layout follows the accepted, conventional form of Jewish weekly. The Review welcomes this new contemporary and offers its best wishes for success.

The following is an excerpt from a letter received from Joe Gold, 1177 Bloor Street West, Toronto, a member of the University of Toronto Menorah Society:

"When Rabbi Eisendrath addressed the University of Toronto Menorah Society on 'Is There a Need For a New Religion?' he struck a new note, gratifying to a goodly percentage of the Jewish student body at the University of Toronto. Too long has stubborn religion been kept obscure, with doors barricaded, with light shut out and with the mouth unjustly gagged. Rabbi Eisendrath although wrongfully attacked by some of our wealthy yet contumacious and non-discerning Jewish citizens (who reflect a possibility of curbing liberalism, and freedom of thought, by a periodical in opposition to the Review has proved himself to be a zealous and unflinching thinker. In his logical address he showed himself to be no hypocrite. What if a Rabbi's opinion differs from yours? Must the result be condemnation? In the early centuries, in the time of primitive ideas and superstitious illusions, when it was shameful to utter truth, then an attempt to stifle speech, to cut out the tongue, to blacken the character and consequently destroy one's entire person would, perhaps, be justifiable. But to-day it is not so. It is the year 1930, with man and science developing side by side. It is a known fact that a growing society constantly changes its institutions: the institutions decay but the society exists. Similarly, man will exist, but religion will change. It is regretful to learn that certain of our prominent citizens and philanthropists, too, talk of liberty of vocal opinion, freedom of thought and advance of intellect and yet unhesitatingly turn about and launch an attack, threatening to destroy what they themselves once advocated. This smacks of profound illiteracy. The proposed periodical, although new, will be antiquated with its synthetic ideas. Because Rabbi Eisendrath does not agree with these people in certain respects, because he does not pay homage to them on a bended knee, because he does not kiss their feet it is indispensable to them to seek a ridiculous revenge. Such is not the true nature of the Jew. These men, hostile to the Review are acting like naughty fellows. It is essential to tear ourselves away from the bony claw of narrowness, bigotry and unfounded statements. To those who are mute to new conceptions, I concede sympathy. I sincerely hope that these will eventually realize their grave mistake."

The above letter is from a young man personally unknown to this column and is printed as a sample of expressions of similar opinion from young people who have grown to manhood and womanhood since the Review was founded eight years ago. This paper has always believed that youth must be served and given a respectful, earnest hearing. No item from children holding a benefit bazaar or wanting club members or from young people's organizations is ever neglected to make room for bigger news. The general editorial attitude of the Review toward young people of Canadian Jewish communities, while maintained out of fairness and from no ulterior motive, has borne rich and surprising fruit during the past few months. Expressions of loyalty to the Review and distaste for a small group of Toronto Zionists who have organized a new paper in opposition to Rabbi Eisendrath and the Review, have come from young men and young women unknown to the paper except by family name. Some of these used to recite on Chanukah programs or little clubs. Now they are grown up and working or attending the university.

As the younger generation any criticism of them from their elders goes in one ear and out the other. But when these same young folks judge the middle-aged their disapproval lingers on the air, caught there by a dreadful, devastating levity. They see through their little prominent citizens with a piercing glance that should make a macher quail and step off the platform. The disillusionment of these young people is complete and their amusement boisterous as merrily they flick off the fossilized opinions of some of the communal leaders.

Humorously enough, the Zionist wave of censure against Rabbi Eisendrath and the Review which was intended to wash up bitter enemies has revealed new friends to the Review and an eager, affectionate following among the young for Rabbi Eisendrath such as no rabbi in Toronto could ever claim before this. Once upon a time when "Dr." B. R. Brickner, (now of "larger fields of endeavour" in Cleveland,) was the very spiritual leader of Holy Blossom Synagogue, Toronto, there resigned from his congregation the present head of the Toronto Zionist Organization and the present intrepid ruler of Hadassah, in a great huff. But just the same this very week the doctor spoke by Hadassah command having been billed in advance with feeling as "our own Dr. Brickner." So time in its soothing passage doth heal the deepest lacerations. And who knows but that if Rabbi Eisendrath ever leaves Toronto poorer for his departure he, too, may be invited back again as "our own Dr. Eisendrath."

Rabbi Speaks Under Hadassah Auspices

Austic criticism of the statements of Dr. Judah L. Magnes, former chancellor of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, was made by Rabbi Barnett R. Brickner, of Cleveland, former head of Holy Blossom Synagogue in this city, at a meeting of over a thousand people held in the Crystal ballroom of the King Edward Hotel Monday night under Hadassah Council auspices.

Peace between Jews and Arabs in Palestine can be based only upon the Balfour declaration, he maintained, and he took sharp exception to Dr. Magnes voicing his views without receiving the consent of the Zionist organization.

"In the first place Dr. Magnes titles his proclamation, 'Like all nations,' implying the idea that Jews are not like other peoples," he said, after a review of the history of Palestine since the beginning of the Great War. "This idea that we are the chosen people has cost Jews no end of trouble. We Zionists have rid ourselves of it, and in dealing with other nations we do not want anything more or less than justice.

"We must not use force," Dr. Magnes says. In other words we have to kiss the whip with which we were lashed. When we turn back the pages of history we find that everything that man holds dear, that which he would lay down his life for, has been obtained by force, and maintained by force. Even the League of Nations would have a police force, not to use, but to demonstrate.

"Dr. Magnes is an ardent pacifist. So am I a pacifist, but if you threaten the ideals that I hold dear and my right to believe in them I will rise to their defence even, if I am obliged to use force."

Furthermore the Rabbi suggested that if the British militia in Palestine at the time of the Arab massacre "had not been held back on the theory of let them fight it out," there would not have been any uprising.

"I have a great respect for the way Great Britain deals with people who are not her own," he said. "No country in the world has a more civilized method of dealing with the East, but I arise to solemnly condemn the British administration in Palestine which, I think, was guilty at that time of criminal negligence."

Edward Geiber occupied the chair at the meeting and the speaker was thanked by Mrs. Meyer Rotenberg.

Palestine Jewry's Courage

The courage that is being displayed by the Jewish settlers in Palestine is most heartening. In contrast with the panicky attitude of Jews in this country, the settlers in the Jewish Homeland, immediately following the unfortunate August riots, proceeded with practical effort for the upbuilding of the land.

Thus, the Jews of Ekron went to Hulda to plow the land after the original settlers had been dispersed as a result of the destruction of the colony by Arabs. The Jewish National Fund colonies report unprecedented activities. The present settlers are not only determined to go on with their work, but they continually call for additional Chalutzim to settle in Palestine.

The builders of Zion seem determined to leave politics to Diaspora Jewry. They are too busy building to be concerned with petty squabbles. There is a healthy lesson for all Jews in this attitude.

Jews will do well to emulate the settlers in Palestine, where Arabs and Jews work side by side, without thought of animosity,—the Arabs having in many instances apologized for the recent outbreaks and the Jews having forgiven. Only in this country agitators are fanning the flames of hatred. For the sake of peace, let us ignore these agitators and instead unselfishly uphold the hands of the builders of Zion.—Detroit Jewish Chronicle.

The Island Within

A Novel by Ludwig Lewisohn

By arrangement with HARPER and BROTHERS, Copyright.

Do I, then, pacifist, internationalist, uncompromising humanitarian suddenly defend—riding my own Jewish hobby—the Pharisees' hostility to Jesus and to the doctrine of universal brotherhood, and range myself against him who is the eternal symbol, sacred even to those who question his very historicity, of the kindly might of the spirit opposing itself to the confederated forces of the world? No. My place is forever with the outcast, the rejected, the despised and rejected, the Jewish or the Jew of his hour in history. . . . Only, only as I warned you in the beginning, at the end of every train of human thought there is that contrast, that opposition, that empire flinging its millions into war, the defeatist in the righteous man and the absolute pacifist the only friend of mankind left. But in an oppressed and decimated and tormented national minority—the Jews under Rome, the South Tyrolers under Fascism—is there not something, is there not much to be said for those who are anxious that no jot or tittle of the cultural or religious heritage that makes that minority a people be abandoned or be lost? For a people has the will to survive just as a man has. And that will to mere existence, mere continuity, forever to be distinguished from a will to power or dominance, is a sacred thing. . . . Young, in brief, is the distinguishing mark. The same action which is right for a weak or defeated people is wrong for a mighty and victorious one. The mystery at the core of conduct is this mystery of defeat being victory and victory being defeat, of defenselessness being the strongest shield and mighty battalions but so many broken reeds. . . . Ghandi will be a voice in the councils of men and a living vision at their hearthstones, when all the powers and principalities that opposed him are but dust blown by the random winds. . . . But observe, please, that Ghandi, in this respect more like the Pharisees, wants home-weaving and home-speech and home-thought and the preservation of his people's peculiar spiritual and even material life. . . . Before there can be an international there must be nations. And we must not let the strong nations stamp out the weak before the days of the international. For the sake of the strong we must preserve the weak; only through the fellowship of the weak can the strong be saved from the slams of their strength. Under the aspect of a little time it is easy and seems profitable to merge oneself with the strong and victorious, especially since the strong and victorious, opposed to their own breaking and salvation, demand it. . . . Many Jews tried to forget themselves and their people in the Hellenizing time and in the Germanizing time and again today in the Americanizing time. . . . But most Jews do not succeed. . . . Something draws them back to stand by weakness against strength and by defeat against victory. . . . And even when they cannot recover the weakness and defeat of their own folk to stand by, they will range themselves, like Marx or Lasalle or a hundred others, by the side of the weak and the oppressed and the defeated of the whole earth. . . . That is probably why the Jews have persisted. . . . Those who "don't know when they're beaten," the blindly and brutally belligerent, will one day be dashed into dust. . . . Those who accept defeat with all its spiritual implications have a chance of lasting forever.

Rabbi Eisendrath's Editorials

"Mr. Cohen was not long on the police court bench before he justified his appointment. Qualities he had which much distinguished the administration of justice in that court throughout its history. He was endowed with strong common-sense and with a conscience, and his decisions usually commended themselves to the common-sense of the community. He served well on a city bench whose chief justice was Colonel George T. Denison, a magistrate who had no use for red tape or technicalities, but whose judgment was wonderfully sure. From time to time appeals were made from his decisions, but they were seldom reversed. Upon hearing that his judgment was confirmed in a case he would say in his jovial way: 'I still think that I was right.' 'Judge' Cohen, as he is popularly styled, was likewise a magistrate who could speedily get before his mind the bones of a case and see through the attempts to decloud the matter. He knew when he was dealing with a forward nature and when with a weak character that had learned the lesson and could be trusted to give a wide berth to the companions who had got him into trouble. Many an offender remembers gratefully the merciful disposition of his case by Mr. Cohen, and some hardened law-breakers will also remember that he was not humbugged by their sham penitence. We hope Mr. Cohen will live long to enjoy his leisure and his retiring allowance."

To which word of homage and hope we add a sincere and heartfelt Amen. May he be vouchsafed many years of blessing in our midst.

When the hot water tap must be "honest to goodness"

The frequent bathing which proves a delight to mother and children, demands a constant flow of hot water.

The intermittent supply provided by a furnace coil or by a heater which has to be lighted before the bath, seldom gives full satisfaction.

To make the "hot" water tap as truthful as its "cold" water twin, you need the instant, constant service given only by an automatic gas water heater. The water heater illustrated, the AUTOHOT gives an all-the-day, every-day service of hot water.

Arthur entered Columbia University in the fall of 1910. The new buildings on Morningside Heights had been opened for a few years only and still gleamed and glittered in their efficient newness and splendor. The stuffiness and the cares and torments of the crowded high school seemed to drop away literally like an old and irksome garment. One walked on this quadrangle with the erectness of a man. One sat in a capacious chair in that great domed library and had attendants bring one books and partook somehow of the dignity of learning. One had a considerable freedom in the choice of courses and studies; one could leave the campus between classes and loiter by the brilliant gold-flecked river under the yellowing poplars. The world became spacious and soothing. All of one's hurt susceptibilities seemed suddenly to be healed and one's secret torments to be quieted. . . . Arthur could walk to college from home and even go home for luncheon, though after a while he preferred to take his luncheon at the commons in University Hall. Yet this closeness and compactness of his life, blended with the spaciousness of the university itself, gave him an indefinable feeling of comfort, of being at home in the world. Or, rather, of that bit of the city that lies between Ninetieth Street and the northern edge of the campus and between West End Avenue and the North River. Arthur made himself a world that was, spiritually, an extension of his home and to which he transferred that feeling of snugness and security which had led him all through his childhood to dream the waking dream of his father's house as a fortress. . . . He didn't at this time analyze his feeling which was so strong that it irritated him slightly to go down town at all, even on an agreeable errand or to a concert or a theatrical performance. He let his instincts guide him rather unreflectively at this period. Later on he was to examine their guidance in this matter with amazement and a kind of awe. . . .

So delightful was the new life that Arthur would have been satisfied for a period without any companionship at all. But the older of his two cousins, Eugene Adams, was already a sophomore and Harry Adams and Joe Goldmann entered Columbia with him. Eugene, thickly immersed in college life and college politics, made sudden dash-like appearances, taking pride in what he considered a duty, to guide, and advise the younger boys. He had already at this time a hard, cool elegance of appearance. His father had long given up traveling for his woolen house and had become a real-estate broker. He had built one of the enormous seven-story red-and-white elevator apartment houses on lower Morningside Avenue which were then considered the last word in New York and now occupied one of the first-floor apartments. He wanted one of the boys to study medicine, because the location was excellent for a doctor. In the meantime he refused to lease an apartment in his house to any physician. It was on this subject that Eugene unbosomed himself to his cousin Arthur and to Joe Goldmann in one of those dashes of his in their direction. His voice was suave and yet had a suppressed harshness in it. He carefully nursed a glossy small moustache. His physiognomy was unmistakably Jewish when observed by a Jew. But his straight nose, slender figure, carefully impassive bearing, coupled with the s at the end of his name, might easily have deceived a Gentile. He strolled with Joe and Arthur on the campus.

"Between you and me, I haven't the least intention of studying medicine. Harry can, if he likes. Or you, Arthur. Father could let you have the office. But people seem to think that there are no professions for Jews in America." He lowered his voice. "The Jews is already overcrowded with Jewish doctors and lawyers. And now the East-Siders are beginning to go to college, too. We have to break into other professions."

Arthur listened solemnly and with admiration. He always received the words of men exactly as they were meant to be received. He never assumed guile, impure motives, imperfect sincerity. He could understand a lie concerning a matter of fact; a distortion or veiling or prudential repression of opinion or conviction lay wholly beyond his grasp. He wondered at Joe's knowing grin.

"Well, what are you going to do?" Joe asked. "Be an engineer?"

Eugene smiled a little abrupt, superior smile. "Not on your life! I like literature and Odell tells me I have an instinct for it. I'm going to be a publisher."

Suddenly Arthur visualized Professor Odell with his prematurely white hair and his impassive Roman face. He was more impressed by his cousin than ever.

"That's a fine idea, 'Gene," he said. Eugene nodded at the tribute due him and darted off.

Joe laughed a little, though his golden-brown eyes remained sad. He had frightened eyes. To strangers they seemed furtive. But Arthur knew better and always felt a little sorry for Joe, though his friend was so much more mature and sagacious than himself.

"A fine scheme," Joe said with that indefinable Jewish undertone—the speech rhythm of Yiddish—which no member of the Goldmann family ever lost. "Sure he likes literature. So do I. So do you. But why does he want to be a publisher? Because it will give him a position. The authors will be Christians, most of them. They'll be under obligations to him; they'll come to his house. Whom does a Jewish doctor treat? Jews. Who are the clients of a Jewish lawyer? Mostly Jews. But a publisher—that's something else. He's a snob."

Something in Arthur rebelled hotly against Joe's interpretation of Eugene's motives. Not because 'Gene was his cousin. He felt quite as close to Joe. He reflected on Joe's words. Yes, he thought he had hit on the fallacy hidden in them.

"Listen, Joe," he said. "That's ridiculous. If every time a Jew goes into a profession that brings him in touch with Christians, you're going to make that the motive, why, why—he got tangled—'well, isn't that what they call in logic a reduction to the absurd? Does a Jew have to do nothing but what will keep him among Jews? I don't see that at all. What's Jewishness, anyhow?"

Joe's sad eyes were fixed on the ground.

"Jewishness is a curse. But the way to do is not to try to run away from it, but to destroy it."

Arthur's heart suddenly beat in a strange excitement.

"How?"

"By working for the proletarian revolution and the real brotherhood of man. Karl Marx explained . . ."

Arthur stopped listening. His excitement had faded. He had no mind for economic facts. They bored him. How excited in a tant, still way Joe could get. And always his eyes retained that scared look. Arthur suddenly wanted to leave Joe and go home. These long, eager arguments made him feel tired and forlorn. . . .

III

There was Hollisworthy Brown. Joe, affectionately mimicking his own father, said: "Hollisworthy—a name, too!" The young man in question was blond and blue-eyed. But his blond hair had a peculiar reddish tinge and a tendency to curl tightly; behind the hair was a dark, curly mass. He was a tall, thin, nervous-looking fellow. He was already a member of the college spirit and associated exclusively with Christians.

"What have you against Brown?" Arthur asked Joe.

"He's the son of H., that is to say Hyman, B-r-a-u-n, millionaire cloak and suit manufacturer, one of the tidiest sweat-shop bosses in New York. And here he tries to act the guy."

Arthur was weary of Joe's injection of this question into every discussion and every human judgment.

"Well, why shouldn't he, if he likes?" Irritably he flung the words at Joe. "We don't believe in the Jewish religion, do we? Goah! we don't even know anything about it. In America all men are equal, anyhow—"

Joe sniggered. "Then why pass off as something that you're not to prove it? Why change your name? Would you change yours?"

Arthur flushed. "No."

"Why not?"

Dully Arthur answered: "I don't know."

Joe sniggered again. "I don't give a damn about my name. But I wouldn't play into the hands of anti-Semitism, which is a purely capitalistic phenomenon, by changing it. But Brown's getting along. He's made a fraternity. I bet he won't take any of his frat brothers home. There's a messiah over H. Brown's door."

"What's that?" Arthur asked. Joe writhed a little with interior chuckles. "Never mind. Why spoil your innocence?"

At luncheon Arthur suddenly asked his mother what a messiah was. His mother thought a little. "I believe, sonny, that it was a sort of a little metal case with the Ten Commandments in it that old-fashioned people used to nail to their doors and kiss when they entered the house."

Unmotivatedly Hama, tall for her age, slender, pretty as a dark sword-blade with deep glints of light in it, burst into choked sobs and rushed from the dining-room. Arthur looked at his mother.

"What's the matter with the kid, Mamma?"

Mrs. Levy frowned. "She was crazy to enter the Bretherton School. Very fashionable, you know. I've kept it all quiet because I had an unhappy feeling about it. But the child persisted. So I applied for her and they turned her down."

The sunny room seemed for a moment to Arthur to become small and remote, to float away from him and to leave him, as it were, in an outer darkness beyond life. He shivered with sudden loneliness and fear. Then by some half-conscious process he forced himself back into an imperfect contact with reality and saw his mother's white hand with its amethyst ring toying with a silver spoon.

"What reason did they give?" he heard himself ask, "and how about the Freefield girls?"

His mother's eyes were not lifted from the silver spoon with which she continued to toy.

"Miss Bretherton was lovely to me personally. She said she hadn't herself the slightest prejudice. She said she was proud of the Freefield girls and of Marjorie Brown and of other Jewish girls in her school."

"Yes, well?"

"But she said that if she took more Jewish girls than, say, one tenth of the whole number of her pupils, the school would get the reputation of being filled with Jews and the Christian girls would stay away. She said that very thing had happened to a fashionable boys' school in town and that the owner had lost all he had in the world. She didn't dare take any more Jewish girls till some had graduated."

A sadism overcame Arthur. From these early years on he was always the voice of the answer when he was in the room. He still looks her way.

"Please, Mamma, please don't say that! It's just because our name is Levy."

Mrs. Levy looked up. "How about Helen Com?"

Hama gave an hysterical ironic little laugh. "Yes, C-o-m-e."

"But, look here, kid," Arthur said, "if conditions are as Miss Bretherton describes them, what can she do?"

Hama lifted her dainty chin and her eyes blazed. "I just hate you sometimes, Arthur. You always take everybody's part against us."

Mrs. Levy got up. "To tell you the truth, sonny, I don't believe that Miss Bretherton, either. The Freefields and the Browns and the Cones are much richer than we are and I guess there are other reasons."

"For instance?" Arthur asked.

But Mrs. Levy shook her head in a melancholy way and would say no more.

At dinner that night, as though impelled to probe her own wound, Hama said suddenly: "Well, what am I to do now?"

Quickly Arthur looked up at his father, who usually limited his words to the discussion of purely practical things or to the playful expression of his intense love for his family. Jacob Levy was quite gray now. But his face had few lines and his head and hands had acquired an aspect of solidity and force. His blondish gray moustache drooped to his chin. His eyes were calm. He lifted his eyebrows now and compressed his lips and wagged his head in a manner that Arthur perceived, with a fatal hostility, to be infinitely Jewish, from side to side. He bent over and took a spoonful of soup with a little sucking noise that increased the tension of Arthur's nerves. Then he spoke.

"Vy do you haf to go to a fashionable school like det? A goot school! Yes, I don't object to expense, neither. Vat for foolishness! A friend of mine, Warschauer—you know, Trudchen Warschauer's cat Sonny—he told me he ve vere hunchlik today—det he sent his daughters to a wondervul school vere dere vere only Chvish girls et det dey got a magnificent education dere. Vy can't Hama go dere?"

Hama's face flamed. "I won't, I won't, I won't!"

Jacob Levy's calm eyes hardened a little. "Vy? Are you ashamed of being Chvish?"

A liberating cry came from the adolescent girl's heart and nerves. "Yes, I am! I'm just as good as anybody else and I'm just like everybody else—like all the Christian girls I know—and I can't go to a nice school and people grin in shops when I give my name—"

"Oh no, they don't, kid," Arthur interrupted her.

Hama looked at him squarely. "Well, they'd like to offend and offend and you can just feel it!"

Mrs. Levy shook her head. "That's hysterical, Hama!"

Jacob Levy brought the palm of his hand sharply down on the table. He looked from Hama to Arthur.

"You don't know how goot you have it in America. You are citizens de same as everybody; dere iss no military service. Now in de old country in my time—"

Arthur was suddenly infuriated. "That has nothing to do with it. Paper Conditions have changed in Europe, too. Nobody pretends today that they have any right to discriminate. Well, they may go on doing it in Europe. They can't do it in America!"
